

Breakthrough Series: What to Do | Mission Projects

God calls us to love our neighbor and uses us to help others overcome challenges they are facing. During this COVID-19 pandemic, more people are facing even more challenges. Here are some ways we can love and bless our neighbors while practicing social distancing:

- Check in on each other regularly. This can be done by creating care teams and phone trees that establish a “buddy” system to ensure vulnerable and hard-to-reach community members also stay connected. You can also send emails, check in via social media, or write a letter. Simply listen and meet people where they are emotionally.
- Serve as a mentor or coach to walk alongside someone in their journey (high school student discerning next steps, someone going through a career transition or unemployment, parents trying to balance working at home and caring for their children while schools are closed, etc.).
- Share the ways you have seen God at work in the midst of COVID-19 realities. You can share in your conversations with others or via social media, encouraging others to share where they too have seen God at work.
- Advocate for your neighbor by speaking out against racism (and all “isms”), speaking out against misinformation, calling our senators to advocate for those most affected by the pandemic, and more.

Visit the COVID-19 Mission page for more ways to love your neighbor during this time, from working against food insecurity and homelessness, to supporting those on the front lines.
